Update February 18, 2004 OCTOBER AT PENN

Stonehenge, A Giant Petroglyph?

Above, an overlay of a petroglyph--from the Columbia River Gorge in the state of Washington--with Stonehenge.

Dr. Anthony Peratt, a physicist at Los Alamos National Laboratory, will give a presentation on 'Talking Rocks' at the University Museum's Celestial Catastrophes in Human Prehistory program, October 17, at 6 p.m. Registration is required (215) 898-4890. Dr. Peratt made the discovery by digitally recording many tens of thousands of petroglyphs in the Southwest while noting their positions and orientations through global positioning satellites. The data was then processed on a large computer to look for similarities between the petroglyphs themselves as well as with other objects made by man thousands of years ago.

CANCELLED

The talk scheduled for October 22, Pharmacogenetics: Trials in a Drug Therapy, has been cancelled.
